[Words appear: TIP #1 What do you want?]

People often have a good idea of what they don't want, like "I don't want to work for a boss who micromanages me" or "I don't want to work long hours." It's just as important to determine what you do want. How can you have the life you want if you don't know what that is?

[Words appear: TIP #2 What will it look like?]

This is a great follow-up to what do you want. Once you're clear on what you want, be sure to ask yourself what will it look like? For example, if you say "I want to be successful," make sure you define what that means. Is it being number one? Is it becoming a millionaire? Or is it simply having pride in the work you do?

[Words appear: TIP #3 How will I show up?]

Finally, what you do is important, but how you show up is equally important. Will you show up energized and present, knowledgeable and calm? Determining in advance how you'll show up has a big impact on your interactions with others as well as the likelihood you'll be viewed in the way you planned. Be sure to take time to ask these questions to get clarity on what you want and how you'll show up so that you can take charge of your career instead of your career taking charge of you.
